Experiment 1: Michael J. Heenan

Introduction: This lab is an analogy for the reaction and processes that occur when a reaction and substrate bond. The experiment will show you how, when various situations occur, reaction conditions increase and decrease. This and the examples of reactions will show you exactly how they work by explaining them in a simple way.

Objective: To show the various processes that occur between a reaction and substrate by demonstrating them in a simple and clear experiment.

Hypothesis: The addition and various challenges placed on the reaction should decrease the production of the reaction.

Materials: 2% White toothpaste
2% Colored toothpaste
1 Container to hold toothpaste
1 Beaker/holder to hold water

Methods: 1. Cut out the 2% toothpaste into three groups of 10 toothpastes, one group of 100 toothpastes, and one group of 2% toothpaste.
2. Choose which person is going to be the reaction and the other the substrate.
3. Place 10 toothpastes into the container for the toothpastes and have the reaction observe the reaction. The reaction is to use 2 fingers to break as many toothpastes as he can. The reaction is to record how many toothpastes the reaction breaks during each period of time called up to 10, 20, 30, 40, 50, 60, 70, 80, 90, 100. This will make sure that the reaction doesn't try to break an already broken toothpaste again. The reaction is to have his eyes closed at all times and use only 2 fingers.
4. 5. Now use the container and place 100 toothpastes in the container. The reaction is to observe the "reaction" after a bucket of water is placed in front of the 1 full minute. Repeat the various procedures in step 3.
6. 7. Now use the container and place 2% toothpaste in the container. Repeat the various procedures in step 3.
8. 9. Now use the container and place 100 toothpastes in the container. Repeat the procedures of step 3, however, the reaction is to use only 2 fingers to break the toothpastes and not other ways.
10. 11. Now use the container and place 2% toothpaste in the container along with 2% colored toothpaste in the container. This time, the reaction is to use 2 fingers to break as many toothpastes as he can. The reaction is to record how many toothpastes the reaction breaks during each period of time called up to 10, 20, 30, 40, 50, 60, 70, 80, 90, 100. This will make sure that the reaction doesn't try to break an already broken toothpaste again. The reaction is to have his eyes closed at all times and use only 2 fingers.
12. 13. Repeat the various procedures in step 3.

Results: Repeat the results from the table as table breaks after each time period. Create a graph for each different set of guidelines (10, 20, 30, 40, 50, 60, 70, 80, 90, 100).

Conclusion: This experiment clearly provides the various aspects of reactions. The different aspects of the experiment clearly provide reactions and their various functions. The first stage shows reactions normally leading with a substrate. The second
